Why should mindfulness and meditation be taught at universities? What impact could the establishment of such programs have on students and on the education system itself? Andreas de Bruin showcases the remarkable results of the first ten years of the

Munich Model
»Mindfulness and Meditation in a University Context« - a program started in the year 2010 in which 2000 students have already participated. Through meditation-journal entries featured in the book, students describe the effects of mindfulness and meditation on their studies and in their daily lives. In addition to an overview of cutting-edge research into mindfulness and meditation, along with in-depth analyses and explanations of key terms, the book also contains numerous practical exercises with instructions.

Learning contracts are agreements negotiated between students and staff (and sometimes employers) regarding the type and amount of study to be undertaken and the concomitant assessment or credit to be gained. The use of such contracts is increasing rapidly in further and higher education and this reflects their effectiveness not only as a mechanism for managing the great variety of learning activities but as a valuable experience for students. In this book, Mike Laycock and John Stephenson present a range of case studies demonstrating best practice in the use of learning contracts. Reassessing the wide-ranging examples cited, they point up the issues raised the lessons to be learnt and the potential for future development. Topics covered in detail include negotiation as a learning tool for tutors and students, learning contracts and the development of skills and competences, student-driven learning contracts in work-based learning, custom-built learning contracts for corporate clients, and the place and potential of learning contracts in higher education. This broad and authoritative analysis of a topical theme will make stimulating reading for lecturers, heads of department and policy-makers in further and higher education.

This book examines planning education provision and approaches globally, through a comparative and longitudinal perspective. It explores the emergence of planning education in the 20th century, with its rich variation and yet a remarkable degree of cross-fertilization. Each of the sections of the book is framed by an overview essay which has been prepared by the editors to provide the reader with a critical exposure to relevant scholarship drawing on the detailed case studies and exploratory essays on key issues in planning education. The first part of this volume focuses on the emergence of planning education programs in the twentieth century as a way to understand the current planning education environment. Then we explore how education in urban, regional and spatial planning has developed in different ways in different countries and continents. The final part of this volume aims to envision how planning can adapt and develop to remain relevant to the development of human environments in the 21st century. Urban planning education has become a pervasive practice throughout the world as urbanization and development pressures have increased over the past half century, and as demand increased for professional trained experts to guide those processes. The approaches vary widely, based in part upon the discipline from which the planning program developed as well as the context-specific challenges within the country or region where the program resides.

To really understand and appreciate literature, one should be able to find out how a writer creates an effect and produces an impression; of wit, humour, tragedy or comedy. The questions which follow the poems and the short stories help one to find out how writers use language in different ways to create, these effects.

This edited book provides professionals in the field of English Language Teaching (ELT) with a situated and culturally-responsive account of diversity and inclusion in English language education, from primary to higher education and in a wide range of settings. The volume focuses on three overlapping areas: interculturality, special education needs, and gender. The chapters in each section seek to help readers reflect on the opportunities and challenges of diversity as a step towards inclusive practices, and raise awareness of critical topics across the curriculum and beyond by engaging in wider social issues. This book will be of interest to language teachers and teacher trainers, as well as scholars working in applied linguistics, higher education, intercultural studies, and related fields.
