Group Discussion and Personal Interview is an important process in selecting people for different positions in any organization. In the present competitive environment, having domain knowledge in a particular subject is not enough, for getting a good job. Ability to effectively communicate, ideas, right body language, problem-solving, analytical and interpersonal skills is essential and prerequisite to achieving the goal. This book aims to equip all with various important skills. After successfully crossing the first hurdle (the MBA entrance exams), MBA aspirants immediately face the next hurdle in the path to their dream B-schools - the Group Discussions (GD) & Personal Interviews (PI). These stages of the selection process give the selection committee of the B-schools a deeper insight into a candidate's personality. During a GD a candidate understands of the topic, attitude, self confidence, presence of mind and leadership skills are put to the test. Inadequate preparation can often sabotage a GD. In a PI time is of the essence. Creating an impact within the limited time frame under pressure plays an important role here. Every candidate needs to be well prepared before facing the panelists. To help our students through this daunting task, here is a book that explains exactly what to expect in a GD/PI. The material in this book outlines each step of the selection process and throws light on what is expected of a student at a GD/PI. The compilation of theory lessons, articles by CAT 100 percentiles, user experiences and GD capsules in this book will definitely boost a candidate's GD/PI preparation. This book aims at providing students with the extra edge and confidence needed to crack the GD/PI session and secure a seat in a coveted B-school. The systematic ways in which the meaning expressed by group discussion rules changes according to social settings is called pragmatics. The rules governing the expected sequence of sentences in a conversation or a composition according to pragmatic conditions fall under the rubric of discourse. In other words, if English language learners want to use English to better themselves, they need to know more than grammar. They need to know how pragmatics and discourse affect their choice of grammar rules as they interact with other English speakers if they want to avoid misunderstandings. Teachers who are preparing their students to interact with other users of English by combining grammar with pragmatics and discourse are teaching them communicative competence.

How to Succeed in Group Discussions & Personal Interviews

Pearson Education India

Group interviews were designed for a multitude of purposes. For one thing, it was intended as a cost-efficient method of evaluating multiple applicants. You may not know it, but being able to sift through fifteen candidates within a period normally intended for only five can save big companies a lot of money. But it's not just about saving money. Group interviews are also meant to simulate real work scenarios. In most cases, you will be asked to interact with the rest of the group in situations requiring skills that would be required in the actual job (i.e. working with people). They're also intended as a means of direct comparison. It's much easier for employers to compare who's better at what when they're asked to do the same task simultaneously. But seeing as only one of you is going to get the job, how can you make sure that you shine brighter than everyone else? This book is designed to help prepare you to do exactly that. You'll learn the do's and don'ts of group interviewing; you'll become familiar with common group interview questions that may be asked in one form or another; and you'll learn about other techniques you may need to get a competitive edge over the other candidates. Let's get started!
